The way in which colour is used to accentuate parts of the interior supplements the neutral basic colour of the building, with its many views of the greenery outside. Photos: © Stephan Paul Stuemmer

The company U|S|E AG, which installs and integrates photovoltaic systems, has its new headquarters in a wave-shaped building that accommodates offices and storage areas under one roof. A bright atrium with plants also serves as a stairwell and provides indirect lighting for the storage areas. The spacious, flexible building structure supports growing and changing processes. Directed incoming daylight lends structure to the interior, whereby a "green centre" separates the open space from smaller office units. The office layouts in the open space area are designed to be flexible as the company, which is in a growth market and produces large solar installations among other things, is expanding rapidly. This means space for new staff is available and the entire space can be reorganised very quickly. Central zones promote communication and interaction due to their attractive furnishings.

The corridor area was designed as a "green centre"

For planned and unplanned talks, the central zone in the open space area offers two-seat arrangements composed of Sedus sopha and meet tables with the standing aid smile. Photos: © Stephan Paul Stuemmer

For the open space area, a spacious office layout was created with dual workstations of the temptation four-leg system. Cabinets are used for zoning. In addition, each employee has a movable rolling container that holds personal items and gives visiting colleagues somewhere to sit. Like the red sophas in the central zone and in the reception area, a red accentuating colour was chosen for the netwin swivel chairs at the workstations. Photos: © Stephan Paul Stuemmer
